Dedication

It seems altogether fitting that this yearbook of Maxson Junior High School, published in the first year of the history of the school, should be dedicated to the school itself, to the spirit of progress which has inspired all who have shared in establishing a school which embodies a well-planned union of the most effective educational ideas. We began the year with the motto, "We're the first, be the best." Surely progress will go on, and in future years many of our accomplishments will be changed and improved. We have, however, been fortunate in having the opportunity to lay the foundations for our junior high. We began with a new curriculum, a new principal, many new teachers, and over nine hundred students. Ten months later a quick survey indicates that we have created many things: a Student Government Association, many clubs, a newspaper, athletic teams, a band, orchestra, several choral groups, a dramatics program, and countless other organizations and programs, most of which were functioning after a few short weeks of school. Administrators, parents, teachers, students, and the staff have worked hard and well to build a good school, a school which we hope is forever dedicated to the idea of progress which is responsible for its existence.
